

Kazakh, and other ethnic minority group workers are often not allowed to leave the factories, or are heavily monitored when they do.<sup>96</sup>

- Isolation: Authorities segregate Turkic and Muslim forced laborers from other workers at factories in and outside Xinjiang. Workers live in segregated dormitories and are transported in dedicated trains.<sup>97</sup>
- Abusive working conditions: Workers are subject to political, cultural, and ideological indoctrination, police guard posts in factories, military-style management, and a ban on religious practices, such as praying or reading the Quran.<sup>98</sup>
- Excessive overtime: Workers are required to attend “patriotic education” and “vocational training,” which includes Mandarin Chinese language classes, sometimes after working factory shifts that include full days of work activities.<sup>99</sup>
